At the Center for Assisted Learning, we offer educational services to students of all ages who desire to improve their academic performance. We specialize in helping those with ADD, AD/HD and dyslexia.

We recognize that every student has unique needs and abilities that influence learning. By discovering a student’s learning style and where their strengths lie, we can custom design a plan of instruction that teaches to these strengths. The end result is:

- Enhanced learning
- Improved organizational skills and study habits
- Higher grades
- Greater self-esteem
- More positive attitudes toward school, teachers and family

The keys to success with these students is to focus on:

- Building self-esteem
- Coaching self-management
- Introducing behavior modification
- Developing coping strategies

Once students understand how to deal with their learning challenges, they will feel more confident in their abilities, less confused and disorganized, and more in control of their learning.

The Center for Assisted Learning is committed to meeting our students’ educational needs. Working in partnership with the student and other professionals, we can eliminate feelings of hopelessness and help equip students with the tools they need to achieve success.

The purpose of coaching is to help students with special needs to develop strategies for attaining important life skills and achieving academic success.

For elementary-age students, we teach parents how to coach their children in learning situations. We help parents develop a coaching strategy by answering critical questions like:

- How does the student learn?
- What challenges to learning does the student face?
- How can we transform challenges to strengths?
- What techniques work best for the student?
- What approaches will increase their confidence?

For teens, young adults and professionals, we work directly with the student. This one-on-one coaching helps them:

- Understand their abilities and style of learning
- Learn self-management and organizational skills
- Develop strategies for overcoming challenges
- Focus on their strengths
